

THE JITTERS

Lynn Lessard Sperl*

M. A. Program in Writing and Literature, Rivier College

Planning a wedding while living a life, so many details to ponder. What's hard to absorb is: I'll be your wife in 42 days.

To have and to hold,
and tend to your cold.
With you, I'll grow old.

"Leave the food to me," you assured weeks ago. Still, no caterer's been signed on to cook for our fete! (Any hope we can elope?)

'Til death do us part,
At last – a new start!
You've anchored my heart.

We still need to rent a big tent – and some chairs,
What about party favors? A limo? "Who cares if I don't wear a suit – it's our day, okay?!"

For richer or poorer,
I couldn't love you more.
You'll never be a bore.

(Is it honeymoon time yet?)
